The present article, in which I discuss a variety of examples, shows how the impulse for concretization transcends genre and time, and that, in fact, there is no difference between inner- and extra-biblical interpretation in this regard.